Use Electrical Appliances EVERY HOUR

In this electrical age of ours man and woman can use some sort of an appliance almost every hour of his or her wakeful day. Electricity knows no blue days. It is as faithful and willing in the morning as at night.

And here is everything of top-notch quality in things electrical—

Chats With Your Gas Man

You may have heard the expression: "There is water in the gas." There is a percentage of moisture in gas, usually in the form of vapor. There is water in the air, so much sometimes that it falls to the ground, just as when there is too much moisture in gas, it settles to the bottom of the gas mains in the streets.

All gas pipes are laid with a slight pitch so that any water may flow to a central point. At this low point a "drip pot" is installed in the gas main.

The small amount of water thus collected is pumped out and a continuous flow of gas at good pressure is thereby insured—one of the many details carefully worked out to provide you with the best possible service.

The percentage of water vapor in your gas is so small that it does not interfere with good combustion. We will discuss this again later on.
